Abstract
Translation of culture-bound terms is of special importance in translation theory and practice. The present study is an attempt to examine the procedures used in translating these terms in the English translations of the Holy Qur’an. As such, English equivalents of terms related to Practical laws of religion (Furū al-Dīn) in five English versions of the Qur'an are identified and the translation procedures used in them in addition to the frequency of occurrence of each procedure have been examined. The study reveals that literal translation is not only the most frequently used procedure but also the most appropriate one in translating such terms.

Keywords: culture-bound terms; practical laws of religion (Furū al-Dīn); translation procedure; the Qur’an.

Introduction
According to Valdes (1986), the interrelationship of language and culture has caused, and it will continue to cause, heated debates among theoreticians. Although it is not clear how they influence one another or which one is the dominant aspect of communication, the current consensus is that they operate as two parts of a whole rather than independently. Hence, any study of language involves a study of culture too.

In addition, there are concepts in any language that are unique to that language or to the culture associated with that language. These concepts are called culture-bound or culture-specific items (Schwars, 2003) and create a cultural gap between speakers of different languages. Since translation involves two languages and two cultures, a proper translation has to bridge this gap as far as possible.

Religious texts in general and the Holy Qur’an in particular abound in culture-specific terms which require special attention in translation. One of the categories of culture-bound terms in the
A study of the translations of terms

Muslim culture is that of practical laws of religion or practices of religion (Furū al-Dīn) that will be used as the material of this study.

The Holy Qur’an has been translated into many languages including almost all languages spoken in the Muslim World. Up to now, printed translations of the Qur’an have been published for the most important languages spoken by Muslims such as Persian, English, Chinese, Japanese, Indonesian, Balochi, and so on (Dammen, 2006, p. 342). Since one of the most widely-used languages is English, this study aims to compare terms related to practices of the religion or practical laws of religion (Furū al-Dīn) – as referred to in Practical Laws of Islam (Turner, 1998) and The Practical Laws of Islam (Islamic Propagation Organization, 1983) – in the Holy Qur’an with their five English translations to see how the translators have tackled the translation problems in translating these cultural terms.

Translation procedures

Different theorists have suggested different procedures for the translation of cultural items. For example, Vladimir Ivir (1987) has proposed the following seven procedures:

1. definition
2. literal translation
3. substitution
4. lexical creation
5. omission
6. addition
7. borrowing

Hervey & Higgins (1992) have suggested the following procedures:

1. cultural transplantation
2. cultural borrowing
3. communicative translation
4. calque
5. exoticism

And the procedures proposed by Newmark (1988a) are as follows:

1. transference
2. naturalization
3. cultural equivalent
4. functional equivalent
5. descriptive equivalent
6. synonymy
7. through translation
8. shift or transposition
9. modulation
10. recognized translation
11. translation label
12. compensation
13. componential analysis
14. reduction and expansion
15. paraphrase

The classification offered by Newmark (1988a) is too broad and covers cultural as well as non-cultural items. In addition, according to Wylie (2004, p.12) some of the translation procedures suggested by Newmark (1988a) are “by nature temporary solutions to specific problems and none is likely to become the accepted standard solution.” Hervey & Higgins’ classification (1992), unlike Newmark’s, seems to be too limited and not applicable to the translation of all kinds of culture-bound terms.

Therefore, the theoretical framework of the present study will be the classification postulated by Ivir (1987), a neat model that focuses on the translation of culture-bound elements and seems to cover all the translation procedures suggested by the above-mentioned theorists. Vladimir Ivir (1987) has proposed his predominantly cultural model in an article entitled “procedures and strategies for the translation of culture”. This model has been used by various researchers such as Jennifer Wylie (2004).

Translation of culture-bound terms
One of the most recurrent difficulties encountered by translators is to find equivalents for culture-bound terms. According to Newmark (1988b, p.94), culture-bound terms are particularly “tied to the way of life and its manifestations that are peculiar to a community that uses a particular language as its means of expression.”

As Wylie (2004) points out, culture-bound concepts give rise to some of the most difficult translation problems; even where the two cultures involved are not too distant, they can be more problematic for the translator than the semantic or syntactic difficulties of the text.

Schwarz (2003, p.14) defines culture-bound terms as “concepts in any language that are unique to that language or to the culture associated with that language and create a cultural gap between speakers of different languages.”

Numerous studies have been carried out on the translation of culture-bound terms. For example, Hariyanto (1999) has studied the appropriate procedures used to translate culture-bound sentences, words, and expressions in Japanese culture into English. The results show that to translate culture-bound words or expressions, the translators have used addition, componential analysis, cultural equivalence, descriptive equivalence, literal translation, modulation, recognized translation, reduction, synonymy, transference, deletion and combination. On the appropriateness of the procedures for translating culture-bound terms, the study shows that descriptive equivalents are appropriate to translate culture-bound words or expressions not found in English culture but considered important enough in the text.

In another study, Jennifer Wylie (2004) investigates the translation of culture-bound terms in viticultural texts from French into English and identifies the following appropriate translation procedures: transference, cultural equivalence, naturalization, literal translation, label, and neutralization.

In this study we have compared culture-bound terms concerning practical laws of religion in the Holy Qur’an and five English translations of them to see what kind of procedures have been used by different translators and which procedure(s) is/are the most frequent and effective one(s).

Method

After choosing the Arabic terms, their equivalences were found in the five English translations of the Holy Qur’an. Next, the procedure(s) used for the translation of each item by each translator was/were identified. Finally, the most frequent procedure(s) was/were identified and examined in terms of appropriateness and efficacy.

Regarding the second term ‘Sawm’, occurring in the following verse, all the translators have used literal translation. As table 2 shows Tr4 has used both literal and borrowing as his translation procedures.

[Shakir] O you who believe! fasting is prescribed for you, as it was prescribed for those before you, so that you may guard (against evil).

[Yusuf Ali] O ye who believe! Fasting is prescribed to you as it was prescribed to those before you, that ye may (learn) self-restraint.

[Pickthal] O ye who believe! Fasting is prescribed for you, even as it was prescribed for those before you, that ye may ward off (evil).
O you who believe! Observing As-Saum (the fasting) is prescribed for you as it was prescribed for those before you, that you may become Al-Muttaqûn (the pious - see V.2:2).

O believers, prescribed for you is the Fast, even as it was prescribed for those that were before you -- haply you will be godfearing.

In the case of the third term ‘Hajj’, figuring in the following verse, as it is shown in table 3, literal translation is the procedure used by Tr1, Tr3, Tr5 and Tr2, Tr4 have preferred borrowing as their translation procedure.

Considering the next term ‘Zakât’, as table 4 shows, Tr4 has used the procedure borrowing while other translators have resorted to literal translation.

وَأَقِيمُواْ الصَّلاَةَ وَآتُواْ الزَّكَاةَ وَارْكَعُواْ مَعَ الرَّاكِعِينَ {2:43}

As regards the term ‘Khums’, table 5 shows that all translators have used literal translation as their translation procedure.

[Al-Hilali] And know that whatever of war-booty that you may gain, verily one-fifth (1/5th) of it is assigned to Allah, and to the Messenger, and to the near relatives [of the Messenger (Muhammad SAW)], (and also) the orphans, Al-Masâkin (the poor) and the wayfarer.

[Arberry] Know that, whatever booty you take, the fifth of it is God's, and the Messenger's, and the near kinsman's, and the orphans', and for the needy, and the traveler.

[Shakir] And know that whatever ye take as spoils of war, lo! a fifth thereof is for Allah, and for the messenger and for the kinsman (who hath need) and orphans and the needy and the wayfarer.

[Pickthal] And know that whatever ye take as spoils of war, lo! a fifth thereof is for Allah, and for the messenger and for the kinsman (who hath need) and orphans and the needy and the wayfarer.

For translating the term ‘Jihad’, arguably one of the most important culture-bound terms in the Holy Qur’an, all the translators have used literal translation except for Tr4 who has preferred to use addition.

For translating the term ‘Jihad', arguably one of the most important culture-bound terms in the Holy Qur’an, all the translators have used literal translation except for Tr4 who has preferred to use addition.

[Pickthial] Say: If your fathers, and your sons, and your brethren, and your wives, and your tribe, and the wealth ye have acquired, and merchandise for which ye fear that there will no sale, and dwellings ye desire are dearer to you than Allah and His messenger and striving in His way: then wait till Allah bringeth His command to pass.

[Al-Hilali] Say: If your fathers, your sons, your brothers, your wives, your kindred, the wealth that you have gained, the commerce in which you fear a decline, and the dwellings in which you delight … are dearer to you than Allâh and His Messenger, and striving hard and fighting in His Cause[], then wait until Allâh brings about His Decision (torment).

[Arberry] say: “if your fathers, your sons, your brothers, your wives, your clan, your possessions that you have gained, commerce you fear may slacken, dwellings you love- if these are dearer to you than God and His Messenger, and to struggle in his way, then wait till God brings His command.

[Shakir] They who turn (to Allah), who serve (Him), who praise (Him), who fast, who bow down, who prostrate themselves, who enjoin what is good and forbid what is evil, and who keep the limits of Allah; and give good news to the believers.

[Yusuf Ali] Those that turn (to Allah) in repentance; that serve Him, and praise Him; that wander in devotion to the cause of Allah; that bow down and prostrate themselves in prayer; that enjoin good and forbid evil; and observe the limit set by Allah;- (These do rejoice). So proclaim the glad tidings to the Believers.

[Pickthial] (Triumphant) are those who turn repentant (to Allah), those who serve (Him), those who praise (Him), those who fast, those who bow down, those who fall prostrate (in worship), those who enjoin the right and who forbid the wrong and those who keep the limits (ordained) of Allah - And give glad tidings to believers!

[Al-Hilali] (The believers whose lives Allâh has purchased are) those who repent to Allâh (from polytheism and hypocrisy, etc.), who worship Him, who praise Him, who fast (or go out in Allâh's Cause), who bow down (in prayer), who prostrate themselves (in prayer), who enjoin the people for Al-Ma'rûf (i.e. Islâmic Monotheism and all what Islâm has ordained) and forbid (people) from Al-Munkar (i.e. disbelief, polytheism of all kinds and all that Islâm has forbidden), and who observe the limits set by Allâh (do all that Allâh has ordained and abstain from all kinds of sins and evil deeds which Allâh has forbidden). And give glad tidings to the believers.

In the case of the terms ‘Amr-Bil-Ma’ruf’ and ‘Nahi-Anil-Munkar’, occurring in the verse below, as table 7 shows, all the translators but Tr4 who has employed addition, have used the procedure of literal translation.

Regarding the term ‘tawalla’, as table 8 shows, all the translators have used literal translation as their translation procedure.

[Shakir] O you who believe! do not make friends with a people with whom Allah is wroth; indeed they despair of the hereafter as the unbelievers despair of those in tombs.

[Yusuf Ali] O ye who believe! Turn not (for friendship) to people on whom is the Wrath of Allah, of the Hereafter they are already in despair, just as the Unbelievers are in despair about those (buried) in graves.

[Pickthal] O ye who believe! Be not friendly with a folk with whom Allah is wroth, (a folk) who have despaired of the Hereafter as the disbelievers despair of those who are in the graves.

[Al-Hilali] O you who believe! Take not as friends the people who incurred the Wrath of Allâh (i.e. the Jews). Surely, they have been in despair to receive any good in the Hereafter, just as the disbelievers have been in despair about those (buried) in graves (that they will not be resurrected on the Day of Resurrection).
O believers, take not for friends a people against whom God is wrathful, and who have despaired of the world to come, even as the unbelievers have despaired of the inhabitants of the tombs.

Finally, as table 9 shows, all the translators have resorted to literal translation in the case of the term ‘Tabarra’.

When those who were followed, disown (declare themselves innocent of) those who followed (them), and they see the torment, then all their relations will be cut off from them.

When those that were followed disown their followers, and they see the chastisement, and their cords are cut asunder when those that were followed disown their followers, and they see the chastisement, and their cords are cut asunder.

Conclusion

Every act of translation involves at least two languages and two cultures; hence, the proper translation of cultural items is one of the most important aspects of translation to which due attention must be paid. Translators have to find the most appropriate procedures to successfully convey these aspects in the target language. Of course, this success is bound to be always relative.

Based on the analysis of the translation of the terms related to Practical laws of religion (Furū al-Dīn) in the Holy Qur’an, three out of seven (of the above procedures) were observed to be used by the selected translators. These procedures are displayed in table 10 below in order of their frequency.

As table 10 shows, the procedures of literal translation, borrowing and addition are most frequently used by the above translators; the procedures of definition, omission, substitution and lexical creation have no occurrence in the translations of the selected materials. It seems that according to the translators whose work has been considered in this study, literal translation is the most appropriate procedure in translating such culture-bound terms. As such, the findings of the present study are in line with those of Ivir (1987) who believes that literal translation is the most common method of cultural transference and spread of influence from one culture into another. He also asserts that "the main value of this procedure is its faithfulness to the source language expressions and its transparency in the target language" (p.41). Since faithfulness is one of the most important factors in the translation of religious texts, and the Holy Qur'an in particular, the appropriateness of this procedure for the translation of culture-bound terms of the Holy Qur'an is evident.

One more point in this regard is the influence of ideological leanings of translators and interpretive tendencies of the religious orders to which they belong on the selection of translation procedures. For instance, Tr4 (Al-Hilali & Muhsin Khan) with their Salafi persuasion (which tends to have a literal interpretation of the Qur'an) have used literal translation, borrowing and addition most frequently. Tr5 (Arberry), a non-Muslim translator, has not used borrowing or addition at all. His emphasis is basically on the general sense of terms whereas Muslim translators seem to be keener on shades of meaning or interpretive nuances, especially if the translators have more literalist tendencies in their religious persuasion.

Another point to be taken into consideration is that a uniform treatment of elements of culture in translation is not possible. The translators of such items have to choose from among the possible procedures by considering the nature of the cultural term to be translated and the nature of the communicative process in which it appears.

As a final comment on the appropriateness of the procedures used for the translation of the selected material (see Appendix for the summary), we quote the statements made by Ivir (1987) in this regard. As he puts it,

For the translator there is a hierarchy of options or an order of preference with respect to the translation procedures. He knows that borrowing, lexical creation, literal translation and definition (in that order) will explicitly draw the receiver's attention to the specific source-culture content, while substitution and omission will mask it; addition makes explicit the information that was unexpressed yet implicit in the source text . . . (p.47)
